An interesting calculation of the position of a national republican convention, if the delegates were chosen on a basis of republican votes, is made by the Atchieon Champion. If the present apportionment of delegates were made in that basis, each delegate would represent 5.466 republican voters, there being 738 delegates for 4,033,950 voters. But the face is Rhode Island represents less than 2,000 voters ; each one from Colorado Deleware, Florida, Georgia and Texas represents less 3,000 voters; and each one from Alais the largest beneficiary from the present unequal system, for in only one southern state does each delegate represent the 5,466 voters which would attempts at incendiarism in this city 14 northern states—California, Illibe necessary on an equal ratio, while Ohio, Ponnsylvania and Wisoffer a reward for the apprehension of sents 2400 more republican votors than consin-each delegate the ratio requires.
